

Corporate Social Purpose Continuum – a Transformational Tool for Business

Leading companies are retooling their community investment (CI) programs and corporate social responsibility (CSR) strategies to create more social value and greater impact. Once satisfied with giving money to charity and allocating a percent of profits to community projects, now these leaders realize that their biggest impact can be generated through their core business. So they undergo a strategic process to repurpose their business models for greater social and business value. They determine what they stand for, build it into everything they do, and enable external actors to participate. Therefore their positive impact multiplies exponentially as it ripples through suppliers, customers, staff and more.

The following is a tool to help companies in this exercise. It is designed to help company leaders quickly understand the steps necessary to make this paradigm shift in CSR, corporate affairs and community relations.
